

Blog for Children's Hospital Boston!

Blogging for Children's is a great way to practice your craft, find your unique voice, and get exposure that could lead to new connections and a better career. The Department of Public Affairs and Marketing is seeking research and clinical fellows and faculty to blog for the hospital's website. You can write just once, occasionally or on a regular basis.

Blog topics can include – but aren't limited to:

- ❖ Your perspective on science/health stories in the media
- ❖ Scientific and medical research and why they're important
- ❖ Ethics, policy and funding issues
- ❖ Innovation in medicine
- ❖ Trends you've observed in pediatric medicine
- ❖ General medical, health and parenting advice

Who's already blogged?

M. William Lensch, PhD, Stem Cell Program
Adrienne Randolph, MD, MSc, Division of Critical Care Medicine
Marvin Harper, MD, Emergency Medicine/Infectious Diseases
Ellen Hanson, PhD, Developmental Medicine Center
Lois Lee, MD, Division of Emergency Medicine, Injury Prevention Program
Michael Rich, MD, MPH, Center on Media and Child Health ("Ask the Mediatrixian")
David Ludwig, MD, PhD, Obesity Program
Claire McCarthy, MD, Martha Eliot Health Center
Daniel Nigrin, MD, MPH, Chief Information Officer

For more information:

Melissa Jeltsen (Thrive health blog) melissa.jeltsen@childrens.harvard.edu, 4-3108
Nancy Fliesler (Research, innovation) nancy.fliesler@childrens.harvard.edu, 4-3109

